

"time heals all wounds"

tell me, did the seconds tend to you?
did the minutes wash out the agony?
did those 24 hours remove the debris of your trauma?

tick tock

i can hear your stitches becoming undone i suppose months didn't know how to sew your grief must have been the one wound time couldn't treat you see time has no master it works continuously

but grief
grief occurs in intervals it knows nothing of being linear it's the unfinished essay sitting on your desk, waiting for a conclusion to be written it's the dust settling on the shelf you said you'd clean it's the 1000 piece puzzle you have yet to put together it's the unfolded laundry sitting on your bed creases have formed and your grief has sunk further than your empty laundry basket time may have softened the blow but the pain is still there

THE ESSAY IS STILL UNFINISHED THE DUST IS STILL SETTLING THE PUZZLE HASN'T BEEN COMPLETED THE LAUNDRY HASN'T BEEN FOLDED

and time is still moving forward without you so when you use the equation of time over grief know that you won't always find the slope of your healing